

Referencing: the Harvard way

This is a general guide to using the Harvard Referencing System (also known as the name and date system). It is based on the British Standards. Many courses have their own convention for how to reference your work.

If your tutor has given you guidance on referencing, follow that instead.

There are two parts to referencing: i) marking in your assignment when you are using another person's words or referring to another person's ideas (in-text referencing) and ii) listing the details of all these references at the end of your assignment. All references in the body of your assignment must match up with a full reference in your final reference list. This must include the information that your reader will need to easily find each work you are referring to.

The reference list at the end of your work demonstrates the depth of your research. It also acknowledges your sources of information which, together with your in-text references, protects you against the serious charge of plagiarism (passing off others' ideas as your own). Every quotation or mention of another person's ideas, theories or data must reference the source it is taken from. So keep records of all the sources you use in your work as you go!

This factsheet provides examples for the most common sources you are likely to use. If you use a source that is not covered, please create a reference based on general referencing principles and include:

1. Author details (surname first) – use a corporate author/organisation if no individual is named
2. Year the material was published/created
3. Title details
4. Publication details – where and by whom a document was published (not always given for electronic material)

5. Online access details for sources that may change – please include web address and date you viewed it (you do not need to include online access details for electronic versions of academic sources such as books and journal articles)

References within your assignment

You can refer to the work of others in several ways within your assignment:

1. Short quote – enclose in quotation marks within your sentence.
2. Long quote – start on a new line, use single spacing and indent.
3. Paraphrase – put another person's ideas into your own words.

All of these must include a reference to your original source by inserting the author's surname, year of publication and page number(s) if appropriate alongside your quote/paraphrase. If you have quoted (or paraphrased a particular short section) you should include the page number; if you are summarising a large section or the entire work, you do not need to include a page number.

Examples

Author surname appears in the body of your sentence – just add the date and page(s) in brackets after the name where it occurs.

As Smith (2013, p.16) states, all resources must be referenced.

Author surname is not given within the sentence – include the name, year and page(s) you are referring to in brackets at the end of the sentence.

It has been stated that all resources used to support your arguments must be included in your reference list (Smith 2013, p.16).

Examples: multiple authors

Two or three authors – all surnames should be given.

(Smith and Jones 2013)

(Smith, Jones and Brown 2013)

More than three authors – the surname of only the first author is used, followed by et al.

(Smith et al. 2013)

No author – use 'Anon.' It is preferable to use an organisation/corporate author where possible instead (see below).

(Anon. 2013)

Corporation/organisation as author – use the company/organisation name.

(Department of Health 2013)

Examples: films

When referencing films in your assignment, give the title of the film followed by the year of production in brackets. Please note that the date is only necessary the first time a film is mentioned, after that the title is enough.

Brassed Off (1996)

Reference list at the end of your assignment

The reference list should be arranged in alphabetical order by author. If an author has written alone and with others, the solo works come first, followed by any joint works. If an author has written more than one solo work, list them in date order (oldest to newest). If an author has written more than one work in a year, you need to add a, b, c, after the year for each reference to differentiate them.

Style note

This is Southampton Solent University's interpretation of the British Standard Harvard referencing style. Whatever approach you take, you must be consistent in the style of your references.

Troubleshooting

How do I reference a PDF?

Many documents are made available as PDFs – this is the format for viewing the document. To reference it, you need to work out what type of publication the PDF is. Is it a PDF of a book? Journal article? Conference paper? Report? You can then follow the reference style for the publication type.

How do I reference lecture notes/presentations?

You are advised to use academic sources for your work, but if you do wish to reference lecture notes you could follow this example:

LECTURER, Year. Title of lecture or PowerPoint. Lecture delivered to [name of course, level #], date of lecture

BROWN, P., 2014. The basics of Civil Engineering. Lecture delivered to HNC Civil Engineering, Level 4, 10th October 2014

Useful abbreviations

Anon.	anonymous
ed(s).	editor(s) or edition
et al.	and others (multiple authors)
n.d.	date unknown
p.	page
pp.	pages
ibid.	in the same book or article
op. cit.	in the work already quoted

Getting more help

For more information and examples of how to reference other types of publication, please see the referencing and plagiarism tutorials in succeed@solent within myCourse.

If you need further help with referencing, please contact the learning skills team by emailing succeed@solent.ac.uk or see your information librarian.

More information is available from books in the library's learning skills collection at 029.65 on floor 0C.

Please note that Harvard is a popular style of referencing but there are other styles you could use. Please check with your tutor as to which style you are expected to follow.
